Debate on the Centennial Bill. &c. [special telegram to the Dispatch.] Washington, January 19 .- Favorable comment seems everywhere to follow the speech of John Randolph Tucker on the thought the collections for the monument Centennial bill made in the House to-day, the able speaker taking a high constitutional House, he ought by this time, if he is fit to be President, to have digested a plan which ground for his opposition to the bill. The speech in length was exactly one hour and a quarter, and was listened to throughout with the most profound attention. Republicans as well as Democrats applaud the patriotic utterances of the speaker, and at its close he was congratulated by many members on both sides.

Mr. Tucker has taken high rank among the ablest Democratic statesmen in Congress, and no more patriotic speech has been heard since the war.
